

Mystery Itching for Donkeys, Horses and Pets – Exposed!

Since 2009, many animals in the UK have struggled with mystery itching, hair loss, pigmentation changes, scabs and scurf.

The culprit tends to be immune to traditional, chemical or spot-on products, is invisible, attacks all year but thrives in the cold weather.

We are all familiar with how sweet itch, midges and flies can make our donkeys and horses' lives a misery during the summer months. But each winter, frequently the itching of pets, large and farm animals can be down to a relative newcomer to the UK - the Millennium Mite. It is believed to have originated in Northern Australia and is now firmly established in the UK.

Strange Traits.

- These mites are invisible and are very active in the cold and wet.
- They eat animals alive, driving them frantic with itching and often causing scurf, hair loss and temperament problems.
- They seem to breed and then migrate from unusual areas of the body.
- They can cause seasonal or year-round issues.

Good News. Most Millennium Mites (and in fact most biting critters, e.g. fleas, midges, mossies, flies, lice, normal mites and ticks) detest Ruggle-it, the pioneering soap-free shampoo and its partner the 100% natural vegetable oil blend. You just use the products differently depending on the species.

The duo have proven effective yet gentle, in ridding and protecting donkeys, ponies, dogs and cats, kennelled dogs, alpacas, goats, chickens, rabbits and even ferrets from itching, whether in summer or winter. Ruggle-it contains no harsh chemicals or Tea Tree and the shampoo can be used as a bath or sprayed or sponged-on with no rinse required. Additionally, by adding tap water, the oil and shampoo can become over five times its volume to save you money.

Maple the donkey had suffered terribly from summer itching but she also experienced dramatic winter hair loss and frantic itching, and understandably, became extremely agitated.

Over winter her skin was hot, scurfy with small crusty lumps, and with extensive hair loss despite no evidence of lice, normal mites or midges. She was not on garlic (it can cause similar symptoms) and had no molasses or haylage either which can add to immune stress. She tested negative for normal UK mites. Whatever was the cause was invisible. Welcome to the misery of life with Millennium Mites!

Maple used the diluted Ruggle-it oil blend (for maximum coverage at minimum cost) as well as intermittent baths with the special shampoo. The winter itching ceased almost immediately. This allowed her immune system time to calm down before the summer bugs arrived. Then when they did, she used the diluted oil - she breezed through summer with hardly a fly on her and no wrecked mane, tail or field shelter! Winter and summer bugs, itching and mystery skin issues were banished with Mother Nature's very versatile and clever Ruggle-it.

The key to success is in following the simple Ruggle-it routine which forces them to 'give up and die'! But if Millennium Mites are seeking a new victim, as soon as they detect the Ruggle-it 'prevention' application in the animal's hair follicles, wisely, they tend to "abandon the idea".

So even if your animal is not itchy, acting before the bugs attack saves struggle and money. Let Mother Nature's versatility help to save you a fortune, be kind to skin yet vicious to opportunistic 'blood suckers'!
